BSE Shares Take a Dive? Here's Why It's Actually Good News for Investors!

On May 23, 2025, BSE Ltd. shares experienced a significant price adjustment, dropping over 65% to ₹2,386.50. This sharp decline was not indicative of a loss in company value but was due to the stock turning ex-bonus following a 2:1 bonus issue. In this corporate action, shareholders receive two additional shares for every one held, effectively tripling the number of shares in circulation. Such adjustments are standard practice, as the share price is recalibrated to reflect the increased share count, ensuring the overall market capitalization remains unchanged. This marks BSE's second bonus issuance since its listing in 2017, with the previous one occurring in 2022, also at a 2:1 ratio. Such moves are often employed by companies to enhance liquidity.

Germany wants its gold reserves back? Trump's return stirs old fears

Germany's gold reserves stored in the United States have become a renewed topic of debate amid concerns about Donald Trump's return to the White House. With 3,352 tonnes of gold—the world's second-largest reserve—Germany stores one-third of it in New York. Now, mainstream German political figures and public broadcasters are questioning whether the reserves are secure. The Bundesbank has maintained its trust in the Federal Reserve, but calls for greater diversification and transparency are growing within Germany's political landscape.

The Reserve Bank of India is considering allowing banks to offer term deposits with tenures shorter than seven days, seeking feedback from banks amidst concerns over slowing deposit growth. While some banks see this as a way to boost liquidity and attract deposits, others worry about potential asset-liability mismatches and limited lending opportunities for such short-term funds.
